When the stomach is empty this membrane, from the contraction of the muscular fibres, presents numerous wrinkles, which are termed the rugae of the stomach. This surface has a velvet-like appearance, and when injected and examined with a powerful lens, we find it formed of fine, short, prominent villi, which are crowded with an infinity of small vessels, whose office is to furnish that particular fluid, called the gastric juice, which is the principal agent of digestion. There is also a number of orifices on the mucous membrane; these are the openings of the mucous follicles, which are distributed in very regular order. OFFICE OF THE STOMACH. It is the...
